A Message from Nanaimo Association for Community Living's Board President and Executive Director

As we continue to navigate the impacts of COVID-19, we are proud of the staff, Self-Advocates, families, and communities who have helped NACL persevere these past 18 months and, ultimately, accomplish more than we imagined possible. The pandemic has certainly changed how we deliver programs and services, but it has not altered our commitment to providing high quality support to people with diversabilities.

With a determination to genuinely listen, we began a deep-dive strategic planning process in September 2020. A facilitator helped us remotely engage over 210 individuals including Self-Advocates, families, our Board, staff, leadership team, and external stakeholders. Throughout these discussions, we learned what we do well and where there exist opportunities for us to do better.

We are grateful to everyone who participated. Our stakeholders' candour and passion helped us formulate four main goals including:

- Providing safe, nurturing and dignified housing for the people we support.
- Creating opportunities for employment and community volunteering (as and when desired) for the people we support.
- Actively supporting people with diversabilities in their pursuit of meaningful social connections and natural relationships.
- Actively supporting families so they feel connected, respected and heard.

These goals will now serve as the guiding posts for NACL as we work hard to deliver services with integrity to the individuals and families we support, and move closer to our vision of a world where all people with diversabilities thrive.

Key Research Findings

In September 2020, with the help of an external facilitator, we embarked on a deep dive strategic planning process to collect input from our many and varied stakeholders. We engaged over 210 individuals representing Self-Advocates, families, employees, our leadership team, the Board of Directors, external peer organizations, Nanaimo employers, funders and those representing the local business community. Thanks to the generosity of everyone who participated, we learned so much about our organization – what we do well and where we can continue to do better.

We received hundreds of pages of feedback, which we carefully reviewed to arrive at several key research findings that have informed both our vision of the future and the goals we'll use to get us there.

Some highlights from the research include:

- Many stakeholder groups see NACL as an organization that embraces a diversity of ideas and is not afraid to try new things in the best interest of the people it supports.
- Across all stakeholder groups, housing is a critical issue. Stakeholders believe that inclusive and innovative housing options that strategically leverage key partnerships will most effectively help individuals and families NACL supports.
- Families need more support and connection on their journey to support loved ones with diversabilities.
- Building meaningful and respectful relationships with Indigenous communities must be a priority for the organization going forward.
- Self-Advocates want genuine connection and friendship with others, they want safe places to live and plain language communication.
- Organizational communications efforts must be enhanced to build awareness of the organization and ensure greater accessibility to information for all individuals.
